

Bloodroot Literary Magazine celebrates its fifth anniversary with an expanded book. A small literary magazine surviving for five years is a feat in itself – but Bloodroot is thriving – from its start as a group of poets who met at Howe Library in Hanover and wanted to see their work published, to a yearly book that sees submissions from all over the country. I am humbled to be part of it as most of the authors are well published writers. It is a beautifully produced book with a spectacular new cover each year, AND with great generosity, “Do” and Deloris create these wonderful evenings around New England for us to gather, practice our reading skills, and meet people who enjoy our work. Thanks to them!!
